We use them for a variety of purposes, including drafting documents, creating spreadsheets and presentations, and keep track of what’s going on. No productivity suite is complete without them and virtually everybody uses them, even kids. The office suite atmosphere has changed very little in the last few years. Existing apps have improved in that time, but it takes a monumental release to usurp the champions in the office space. It’s a difficult ecosystem to get into since a good office experience requires spreadsheets, a writing app, presentations, and other features. It’s hard enough to make a good app for just one of those things, let alone all of them. Here are the current best office apps for Android. We also have separate lists for spreadsheet apps and word apps if you want to view your options at a more granular level. The best office apps for Android AndriOpen Office is the first Android port of the popular OpenOffice. It comes with the full suite of office apps, including a word processor, a spreadsheet function, a presentation app, and a few other things. You also get a drawing app and an equation editor (for your spreadsheets). There isn’t much to talk about, honestly. It supports most file types you would run into over the course of your average life along with plenty of more niche file types. The editors and processors are more than powerful enough for most stuff. Plus, it’s entirely open-source and free. It does feature cloud storage support for Google Drive, Box.com, Dropbox, OneDrive, and your own personal hardware if you have it. It’s a strong free option even if there are a few bugs here and there. Price: Free / Up to $14.99 Docs to Go is an older but established office app that’s been around for quite some time. It’s still receiving new features and updates. It has the basics, such as word processing, spreadsheet editing, and presentation editing. It does an excellent job of letting you do these things without too much of a setup. The paid version unlocks password-locked files, saving to (and loading from) cloud storage sites, and file syncing with your desktop. It’s not great in every situation, but it’s one of the more solid office apps. Read more: The best calendar apps for Android Price: Free / $1.99-$299.99 per monthGoogle Drive is a favorite among our readers. It has a whole suite of office apps, including a PDF Viewer, Google Docs, Google Sheets, Google Slides, and, of course, Google Drive. Drive serves as the hub. It’s really just a cloud storage app where you can view your files or make new ones. Opening any document in your Google Drive will automatically open the appropriate app. It’s all completely free unless you need to expand your Google Drive space. Google recently made their Google Workspace offering free. It adds additional features and integrations into Gmail and includes things like a chat function. It may be a bit much for personal use and we can’t guarantee that it’ll remain free forever. However, it’s still an excellent overall option and it’s free for right now, at least. Up next: The best PDF reader apps for Android Price: Free / $6.99-$9.99 per monthMicrosoft took its sweet time publishing its office apps to mobile. They instantly became among the best once they were. You can download Microsoft Word, Excel, and PowerPoint for free. Most of their functionality is available without paying a dime. You’ll be able to open and save files, use most of the editing tools, and, more. Those files can be synced to your desktop via OneDrive. You can get an Office 365 subscription which will unlock some additional features. However, it’s not necessary for the basics. Joe Hindy / Android AuthorityMicrosoft Remote Desktop is basically what the name says. It lets you remotely control your Microsoft PC from your mobile device. It takes a bit to set up. You have to get your PC ready for remote access and then connect it with this app. However, after that, you can do basically whatever you want. That includes accessing your office software on your actual computer. It’s a weird workaround, but a completely legitimate one. Chrome Remote Desktop is another excellent app that does basically the same thing. Microsoft Remote Desktop doesn’t work well on Chromebooks quite yet, but keep an eye out for future updates that may add that functionality. Microsoft recently retired the previous version of this, so we’ve updated the link to the new one. Try these too: The best productivity apps for Android Price: Free / $19.99-$29.99 OfficeSuite is a long-time favorite for many people. The app has changed a lot from its early days. Currently, the developers seem to be transitioning the suite into something closer to Google Drive or Microsoft OneDrive. That way they have a cloud storage solution on top of the office environment. Most of the basic features are available in the free version and that’s good news. The paid version allows for PDF scanning, a font pack that’s compatible with Microsoft, a spell checker, and additional document support. It’s one of the better run-of-the-mill office apps. It is also among the most expensive. The pro version goes for $19.99 while the improved pro version runs $29.99. Both are single payment options and not subscriptions. Price: Free / $3.99 per month / $5.99 per month Polaris Office is a lot like OfficeSuite. It used to be a good, simple office suite. The app isn’t simple or small anymore. It does have a ton of features, including the basics along with note-taking, document searching, encrypted files, and support for various formats. That includes PDF and Microsoft documents. The free version is serviceable if you can stand the somewhat annoying adverts. You can also get $3.99 and $5.99 per month subscriptions. That gives you additional features like the ability to use it on more than three devices along with extra cloud storage. The subscription models aren’t great, but the free version is still okay for simple stuff as long as you don’t mind adverts. Quip is one of the newer office apps on the list. It’s also one of the few free ones. It has a small, but decent set of features. That includes the ability to collaborate on documents with other people. It comes in the form of a chat that you can use to talk to people while editing documents. You’ll also get a support for spreadsheets, cross-device syncing, offline support, and various exporting options. It also has cloud storage support. Quip hasn’t been around as long as other office apps, but it’s better than many of them. Get more apps: The best cloud storage services for Android Smart Office 2 is another one of the rare free office apps. The app used to cost money. However, at some point, they decided to let it go for free. It comes with all of the basic features as you’d expect, including support for word processing, spreadsheets, and presentations. It also comes with support for Microsoft Office documents from 2013 and back. You can also use it to view (and save) PDF files, some image files, and WMF and EMF file types. The interface is clean and simple. It’s a good option for those who don’t need much. Price: Free / $29.99 per yearJoe Hindy / Android AuthorityWPS Office was once called Kingsoft Office. Despite the name change, it remains one of the most popular office apps on Android. Some of the features include viewing and converting PDFs, doing the basic stuff (documents, spreadsheets, presentations), and more. It also comes with support for wireless printing, support for Microsoft file types, and support for 46 languages. WPS is among the best free office apps. There is an optional subscription that includes things like cloud storage, but it’s not necessary if you use Google Drive or other solutions already.
